Willard Motley

Never Sick Author Dies Of Gangrene

MEXICO CITY — "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" was one of author Willard Motley's best-selling books. He died March 4 in Mexico City, at the age of 52, victim of a gangrene infection.

Motley's first novel, "Knock On Any Door," was published in 1947. A screen version of it appeared two years later with John Derek as the lead and Humphrey Bogart as his co-star.

A Negro, Motley was a unique as a novelist in that he wrote exclusively about people a day life in white slums.

He was born on Chicago's South Side, child of a middle-class family, but moved to the slums after graduating from high school to find material for his books.

Migrant Worker — For several years, Motley worked as a migrant worker, short-order cook, football coach, ranch hand, photographer, waiter and window washer. From this experience he gained insight into the evils of slum life and how that environment can strip a man of his incentive toward good.

Motley travelled extensively, crossing the continent several times by thumbing, "bumming," bicycle and jalopy. He once spent 30 days in the Cheyenne, Wyo., jail on a vagrancy charge.

Did A Porter — The novelist was the son of a Pullman car porter and graduated from Chicago's Englewood High School, where he played football. Among his post-high school acquaintances were several minor criminals, whom he incorporated into the character of Nick Romano, the Italian-American hero of "Knock On Any Door."

"We Fished All Night," published in 1951, was Motley's second book. Nick Romano, Jr., appeared in "Let No Man Write My Epitaph," published in 1960 as a sequel to his first novel.

Motley had secluded himself in a house in the hills overlooking Mexico City to work on another novel, "My House Is Your House," when he was stricken with an undetermined illness. He continued to work on the book about a small Mexican town with a tourist problem until Feb. 28 when his illness became more severe and gangrene developed.

Never Sick — "He always prided himself on not ever being sick, and said he didn't need doctors," said his adoptive son, Sergio Lopez. "He liked to call himself 'the little iron man.' He let his illness go too long before getting proper medical attention."

How did Motley gather material for his books? He once said: "I think that I most enjoy sitting in bars and restaurants watching people and listening in on their conversations and wondering about them — who they are, what their lives are."

Why did he write about lower class whites? — "They were the people I knew best," Motley said.

Roscoe Dunjee Is Dead

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. — Long considered one of the most crusading Negro newsmen in the nation, Roscoe Dunjee, editor-publisher of the Black Dispatch newspaper in Oklahoma City, wrote "30" to his colorful career at the age of 81.

A Native of Harpers Ferry, W. Va., Mr. Dunjee gained widespread attention throughout the southwest as a crusading newsmen and a key NAACP organizer.

He was founder of the NAACP in Oklahoma and served as state president for many years.

How World Saw Malcolm X's Death

(Amsterdam News Special Summary)

The assassination of Malcolm X has produced various reactions around the world, ranging from a single routine news item in Moscow; to coverage as one of the year's biggest crime stories in London; to the possible elevation of the slain black nationalist to the status of a minor martyr in some African nations, notably Algeria and Ghana.

All in all, however, the consensus of opinions among political experts abroad seems to be that the slaying will have little or no lasting effect upon international politics.

Malcolm's death apparently has had the greatest emotional impact in certain African and Asian areas which are especially sensitive to racial issues. But, on the whole, African reaction has been surprisingly lukewarm.

In Ghana

Notable exceptions were Ghana, where Malcolm was given a warm and tremendous reception during his African tour last year, and Algeria, a hotbed of racial and religious nationalism where Malcolm's views fell upon many sympathetic ears.

In Accra, capital of Ghana, the Daily Graphic newspaper editorialized that the assassination will go down in history as "the greatest blow the American integrationist movement has suffered since the shocking assassinations of Medgar Evers and John F. Kennedy."

"It is time," the Graphic commented, everyone realized that man's evolution as a superior being has reached a height that admits of no such things as murder and assassination as the only media of conciliation."

The Times

Another Accra paper, the Ghanaian Times, said the murder has added "another indelible stain on the American conscience" and added:

"It does not matter whose finger pulled the trigger. That finger was not one man's. It represented an agency whose operations symbolized a kind of society built upon hate and total disregard for the human soul."

The Times called Malcolm "the militant and most popular of Afro-American anti-segregationist leaders," linking him with "a host of Africans and Americans... who were martyred in freedom's cause." Those with whom Malcolm was compared included Medgar Evers, John Brown and Patrice Lumumba, the ousted premier of the Congo, found slain four years ago.

In Algeria

The Algerian press at first jumped to the conclusion that Malcolm had been killed by white racists. The earliest headline claimed his death on the Ku Klux Klan. Later, the Alger Republic described as a pro-Communist daily, pointed the finger at "American Fascism." American correspondents reported that there are signs that Malcolm may be elevated to martyr status in the North African country.

In Lagos

Of course, even the presumably responsible conclusions of American foreign correspondents must be taken with a grain of salt.

For instance, the New York Times' man in Nigeria reported on Feb. 27 that editorial comment in Lagos, the capital, "deplored the murder but did not treat Malcolm as a martyr or endorse his views." On the contrary, the Daily Times of Lagos, in an editorial published some days earlier, said:

"Like all mortals, Malcolm X was not without his faults... but that he was a dedicated and consistent disciple of the movement for the emancipation of his brethren no one can doubt. Malcolm X has fought and died for what he believed to be right. He will have a place in the palace of martyrs."

New Dealer Williams Dies In DC

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Aubrey W. Williams, a key figure in the Roosevelt New Deal and a leader in integration work in the South, died here March 3 after a long illness. He was 75 years old.

Six years ago, because of ill health, he retired as publisher of the Southern Farm and Home, a journal with 350,000 subscribers. At the time of his death he was president emeritus of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., a south-wide organization working for racial equality. He was also chairman emeritus of the National Committee to Abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee, and a member of the national board of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Williams rose to world prominence during his work with the late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt in the days of the New Deal. He was first an official in the Works Progress Administration (WPA) and was later head of the National Youth Administration (NYA).

During his years with the New Deal, Williams was a close personal friend of President and Mrs. Roosevelt.
